Groundbreaking held for new Aerophysics lab

by Rick Mould
for the Exponent

Area leaders got their first look at the beginnings of the aerophysics research facility for UAH during a ceremonial groundbreaking on Friday. Lt. Gen. Robert D. Hammond, Commander of the U.S. Army Strategic Defense Command and UAH President Louis Padulo spoke at the groundbreaking at the site located on the Army's Redstone Arsenal.

"It is no overstatement for us to say that a national resource was in peril and was in danger of being lost forever," Hammond said. "Fortunately there were a lot of good people who had the vision and foresight to recognize that and prohibit that from happening. The UAH proposal was accepted and Dr. Padulo persuaded the university to finance it."

The building will house four two-stage light gas guns capable of launching projectiles at velocities of over 17,000 miles per hour or 24,000 feet per second. The equipment is being relocated from a General Motor's facility in California.

The projectiles pass through evacuated chambers where detailed measurements are made with radar and optical instrumentation. After the measurements are made, the projectiles are stopped inside the chamber by multiple steel plates.

The research is used in the development of ballistic missile defense systems, tactical missile systems and strategic offensive systems.

Red Cross counting on boost from students

by Andrew Fandre

UAH and The Exponent are sponsoring a blood drive Friday in the U.C. Exhibit Hall from 9 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. The Red Cross always needs all types of blood and hopes UAH will be a plentiful source.

Blood is a necessary resource derived from the community, but often the community doesn't fulfill the needs of hospitals. The Huntsville Red Cross needs 1000 donors a week to service 21 hospitals in 10 counties. Most think that hospitals use blood for trauma accidents and emergency situations, but the blood that you donate may well go to cancer patients who use blood every day.

While the excuses for not giving are plentiful, none of them are valid. There is no risk of getting a disease while giving blood. Judith Cameron, Director of Hospital Services at the Red Cross, said, "Most people give the excuse, I'll give in an emergency, but that's already 24 hours too late. It takes 24 hours to process blood."

Huntsville came to the immediate aid during the tornado with over 1100 donors in that weekend, but that took the Red Cross by surprise. They didn't have the facilities to handle that many people in such a short time. It would be so much better if people gave regularly.

"People don't realize how easy it is, how simple it is, and how good it will make them feel giving blood," Cameron said.

"UAH has been a good participator in blood drives in the past. I hope The Exponent's involvement will increase the amount of donors we receive," Cameron said.

There is no reason that you shouldn't give blood if you are on campus Friday. The only requirements are: you must be over 110 lbs. in weight and be disease free. Feel like it's your civic duty, your good deed for the day. You'll feel good, and you may save a life in doing so.

Board "not preoccupied." says Austin

by Curt Craig
associate editor

Phillip Austin, Chancellor of the University of Alabama System, addressed a well-attended session of the UAH Faculty Senate on January 18. The meeting was held in the Recital Hall of Roberts Hall at the usual time, 12:30 p.m.

Austin began his address by commenting on the necessity of tax reform. "We can't do anything without dramatic tax reforms," he said. He continued by mentioning a gap between expectations and realizations in the UA system, and suggested that effective tax reforms would close that gap. He further noted that "the state budget admittedly has inadequate resources," and that for the UA system to survive, kindergarten through grade 12 must be strengthened.

systems. It also could assist in the development of armor for spacecraft against meteoroids and other space debris. Dr. Gerald Guinn, a UAH research scientist, will direct the facility.

"No other facility will have the instrumentation capabilities we will have here," said Hammond. "It will mean we will be able to collect more and better data.

Padulo said the research will be a great asset to UAH. "It is appropriate for UAH to carryout this type of research," said Padulo. "We will be training Ph.D. and master's degree students here. And when you have a unique and world class facility like this, you are able to attract top researchers here.

The Army Strategic Defense Command awarded UAH a $5.4 million contract last year to establish the capability to conduct hypervelocity research, studies utilizing the facility. The contract includes an option totalling $4 million for UAH to conduct such studies for the command.

"This facility is entirely consistent with the traditions and reputations for initiative, technological vision, leadership and selfless service to the nation that have developed around the Army Missile Command, the U.S. Army Strategic Defense Command, Marshall Space Flight Center, the University of Alabama in Huntsville and the contractors in Huntsville's private sector," said Hammond. State Rep. Dewayne Freeman and State Sen. Bill Smith committed funds to assist the construction project. Freeman directed $40,000 in state monies and Smith another $20,000.

The Chancellor then discussed the issue of duplicate programming. "I don't buy it," he said. He noted that he didn't see much duplicate programming here. Further, Austin agreed that "excessive is wasteful," but concluded that our resources are not being wasted.

General impressions of UAH were Austin's next topic. He mentioned the visions of former UAH President Wright and current president Padulo, and said that those visions have minor variations. He continued by saying that UAH "ought to aspire to a higher proportion of graduate programming," and continue what we're doing. He also noted "expanding programming in areas for which UAH has not been strong for North Alabama.

Six leading indicators of North Alabama's economic strength remained strong during the third quarter of 1989. The North Alabama Quarterly Index of Economic Activity grew 1.7 percent during the third quarter. The index is compiled quarterly by the University of Alabama in Huntsville and the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Seven of the nine index components registered strong or very strong during the third quarter, according to Dr. Niles Schoening, UAH economics professors. The strongest gains were in passenger arrivals and departures from the Huntsville International Airport and electricity sales to industrial and commercial customers.

The index also includes an economic forecast for North Alabama through 1993. Steady growth is expected in employment, said Schoening. However, the growth will be moderated by declines in defense spending which will affect the aerospace and electronics industries.

"The areas most likely to experience the largest increases are those jobs in the commercial and services sectors," said Schoening. The quarterly index compares six factors — retail sales, employment, single family building permits, airport statistics, TVA power statistics and farm prices — to determine the region's economic health. The index covers all counties in the TVA Alabama Power District.

Over the last 40 years, research programs supported by the American Cancer Society have made increasing progress in the treatment, detection and prevention of cancer. In 1986 alone, the Society funded over 700 projects conducted by the most distinguished scientists and research institutions in the country. Which is why, this year, hundreds of thousands of people will be successfully treated for the disease.

"We are winning.

But we need you to help keep it that way.

The Alabama Department of Economic and Community Affairs (ADECA) provided $50,000.

"This support from Rep. Freeman, Sen. Smith and ADECA certainly indicates that this research project has support from throughout the state," said Padulo.

Dr. Ken Harwell, UAH Vice President for Research and Associate Provost said the facility is expected to be operational by the fall of 1991. It will employ as many as 20 people and is expected to attract between $3 to $10 million in new research monies.

Solutions for Families in the '90s

Herschel McFarlen, Executive Director of AGAPE of North Alabama, will be the featured speaker for "Solutions for Families of the '90s." Mr. McFarlen is widely experienced in counseling young people and will discuss realistic, Christian-based solutions to these problems. There will be a question and answer session after the presentation.

“...relying on the generosity of this tiny minority

by Jane M. Dudley

This Friday, the 26th, the Exponent is again sponsoring a blood drive. That means this will be here this year, to give you a good opportunity to do something that you know is badly needed, and will leave you feeling great — you can donate a pint of blood. You won’t miss it, but there is someone whose life could be saved by it.

Didn’t we all love those videos from just after the tornado, showing people lined up around the block at the Red Cross center on Washington Street? Someone had lost his family, and had nowhere to go. Now there are no present disaster, demanding hundreds of donations today, but the need goes on, whether or not blood bank reserves are adequate. The term “blood bank” might even be a little misleading. In a regular bank, money can sit for many years, but a blood bank doesn’t work that way. According to the Red Cross, “Blood is fragile and usually must be used within 35 to 42 days.”

The deadline for letters to the editor is Friday, 5 p.m., before the following Tuesday’s edition of the Exponent.

“...relying on the generosity of this tiny minority

by Gregory Casteel
columnist

Imagine this hypothetical situation: Your best friend, whom you dearly love, runs into your house one night carrying a gun. He tells you that his bank has made a loan, and that he is currently bankrupt. He is furious. He vows to get even with the bank. Do you feel that you should support him in his plan to rob the bank, or are you willing to tell him of the danger of getting caught, and advise him to turn himself in to the authorities?

But now your dilemma becomes even worse. Since your friend can’t decide which course to take (robbery or arson), he wants you to decide for him. Since you are his best friend, you trust his judgement. Obviously, you must not do either, since both are wrong and dangerous. But his mind is made up. He will do one or the other, and he demands that you either decide for him which you think is correct, or that you refuse to participate in his decision. What is your answer?

Well, I can’t speak for you, but I can tell you what my answer would be (and I feel that most of you would give the same answer). My answer is “NO!” I would simply have to say “I refuse to make your decision for you. I do not approve of what you are doing, and I can’t try to stop you from making such a horrible mistake. But if you are determined to go through with this immoral act, I do not expect me to be your accomplice. I will not participate in your wrongdoing by participating in your decision.”

That is what is called “taking a moral stand.” You would probably do the same sort of thing. Now, there might be one or two of you that think that you really cared about what your friend did, you would have made a different decision. You think that person was crazy (or very stupid). You know that it is because you care so much for your friend that you make that decision; you had to take that moral stand for your good as well as your own. You know that your decision was right — and anyone that thinks otherwise doesn’t know what they’re talking about (and it’s really none of their business anyway).

I have been in the UAH Model UN club for four years, and I have learned much about parliamentary procedure (the type of procedure used in legislative bodies such as Congress and the UN). So I am quite familiar with the rules of decision making by voting. When you are trying to make an important decision by democratic means, you must first get an understanding of the issue at hand: what is involved, then you must make your own personal decision, then you must vote either “YES” or “NO”, or “ABSTAIN”. When you abstain, what you are actually saying is “I refuse to participate in this decision”. No one can force you to vote “YES” or “NO”.

And there is no dishonest in abstaining. People abstain for a variety of reasons. And if someone believes that either decision would be wrong, he should abstain certainly.

Never let anyone tell you that there is anything wrong with refusing to participate in a decision if you feel that any outcome of the decision would be wrong. Let’s look at another hypothetical situation. Let’s say that you are with a group of people who are trying to decide how to spend a Saturday evening. They have narrowed their choices down to two — either they will by some crack and get wasted, or they will go and vandalize a public building. You, of course, think that either option is insane, and you try to convince everyone else of your point of view. But, as usual, no one listens to you. They decide to put the question to a vote. When it comes your turn to vote, you abstain — you refuse to participate in the immoral decision. In the end, it is decided to vandalize the public building. You feel that you have done your part of the world to save it. If you were with us, you would have done something about it.

You don’t approve of bank robbery, so you can’t support him if he doesn’t approve of arson, so you can’t advise him to burn down the bank. One course is more, or less acceptable to you than the other. What is your answer?

Now a note to readers who are saying, “Uh, uh, not me, I forget when I get a paper cut.” We are delighted to reprint an article here by Dave Barry, who was a regular contributor to the Sunday edition of the Huntsville Times. He, too, was a regular contributor about giving blood.

I had picked up the application at the bookstore, I decided to use THE CARD. I hesitated. Then I reluctantly retrieved the last of my money: a ten dollar bill. I slowly staggered away speechless, hearing a faint "Thank you and come back" from the Person Behind the Counter. What does it all mean? What was Karl Maiden talking about when he said..."don't leave home without it?" Why would anyone want to steal one if you can't use it? I kept trying to convince myself that this is a card I should keep. Well...it makes a great straight edge...and it keeps your wallet from bending...and...

I cut it up and threw it away.

Cross blood drive at The Miami Herald. Either I am going to do it, or, I'm somebody now. Of course, I am no longer a little boy. Of course, I am no longer a little boy. Being, scheming in his laboratory, Dr. Salk was there to give it. And so now I am...I'm going to faint," I always tell them. "He's due for a tetanus shot." Of course, I am no longer a little boy. "He's due for a tetanus shot." Of course, I am no longer a little boy.

"You'll hardly feel it," said Mrs. Hart, this being the last time I ever trusted a grown-up. And it got worse. It turned out that you had to get vaccinated several times, plus there was talk that you had to get a "booster shot," which, according to reliable reports circulating around Wampus Elementary, turned your entire arm purple and sometimes made it actually fall off. I realize now that Dr. Salk was a great scientist, but at the time I viewed him as a monstrously evil being, scheming in his laboratory, dreaming up newer, more horrible vaccination procedures (I've GOT it! I'll stick the needle into their eyeballs, HAHAHAHAHAHAHA!) and then traveling around the nation, like some kind of reverse vampire, injecting things into innocent victims selected by alphabetical order.

And when we talk about fiendish plots to jab large needles into small children, which was often, Dr. Cohn would look at my file and say to my mother: "Well, he's due for a tetanus shot."

But I had one LAST WEEK! I'd shriek. They never believed me. They were grown-ups, so they believed the stupid file, and sales continued to boom at the Tetanus Shot Corporation. Of course, I am no longer a little boy. I'm in a grown-up now, and I'm aware of the medical benefits of inoculations, blood tests, etc. I'm also aware that the actual physical discomfort caused by these procedures is minor. So I no longer shriek and cry and run away and have to be captured and held down by two or more burly nurses. What I do now is faint. Even if it's just one of those procedures where they prick your finger just a teeny bit and take barely enough blood for a mosquito horn d'oeuvre.

"I'm going to faint," I always tell them. "He's due for a tetanus shot." Of course, I am no longer a little boy.

OK, this is it. The last day of the Red Cross blood drive at the Miami Herald. Either I am going to do it, or, I'm somebody now. Of course, I am no longer a little boy. Being, scheming in his laboratory, Dr. Salk was there to give it. And so now I am...I'm going to faint," I always tell them. "He's due for a tetanus shot." Of course, I am no longer a little boy."

We will continue to have comedians and musicians every Thursday night for the Winter Quarter.

Encounters 12: Ruben and the range in silver and bronze

The impressively realistic bronze and silver sculptures of Donald V. Rubin, a recognized Huntsville artist, will be on view in the Huntsville Museum of Art’s Foyer Gallery from January 14 through March 4, 1990. The show is the twelfth in the Museum’s “Encounters” series of one-person regional and thematic exhibitions.

“Encounters Twelve” highlights Rubin’s more recent sculptures depicting range animals and wildlife, and includes a set of silver bas-reliefs of North American predators and several portrait busts. Also featured is a step-by-step educational display of the casting process. The character study “Trail Driver,” created by Rubin in the early 1980s, is shown in four states—the original wax model, a copy wax model, the ceramic casting with bronze cast still inside, and the finished bronze head.

A remarkable assembly of artistic achievements, “Encounters Twelve” offers a heartwarming and technically fascinating art experience. Admission to the Museum is free, and the galleries are open to the public from 10 to 9 on Tuesdays, 10 to 5 Wednesday through Friday, 9 to 5 on Saturday, and 1 to 5 on Sunday. The museum is closed on Mondays. For more information, call 535-4350.

But when someone does care, and has studied the issues and the candidates, and has given much thought to the matter, and has decided that none of the candidates is acceptable to him, then he has the right to vote "NO", by not voting. And no one has the right to criticize this decision. I have a moral right, and a moral obligation, to abstain from participating in a decision if I feel that any possible outcome would be immoral. This is a democracy: and that means that I have the right to vote any way I choose—even to vote "NO".

Mayor's Cup win is extra sweet for UAH by Jennifer Grace

sports editor

An enthusiastic crowd of fans assembled in the Von Braun Civic Center for the Mayor's Cup on January 16 to watch the six women's basketball teams of UAH defeat the ladies of basketball powerhouse A&M. This being the Lady Charger's first and biggest win this season, Coach Joe Hagan kidded the team after the game by saying "OK, you girls did this on purpose because I'm a new coach, right? We lose the first thirteen games and then beat A&M."!

The two teams played pretty evenly in the first half, but UAH went to the locker room with a one-point lead. From the beginning of the second half until the end, it was all UAH. Kim McBride opened up the second period by scoring with a three-pointer to make the score 46-42. McBride connected on several more jumpshots as the Chargers added baskets with A&M for a while. Tanya Wigley sank one from the top of the key, and Heather Day her shot was kept alive by Bridgett Brown, who scored 39 points to become the MVP for the Lady Bulldogs.

Coach Hagan sent in UAH's 6'2" center Jamie Bradin, who immediately scored off of two turnaround jumpers in the lane. This gave UAH their biggest lead of the game, fifteen points, at 73-58. A&M made a run in the last few minutes of the game, but had several scoring attempts blocked by Bradley. The Bulldogs did manage to tos in one last three-pointer at the buzzer and lost to UAH, 74-81.

Freshman Tanya Wigley of UAH later commented that UAH's success was the result of "lots and lots of hard work." Said Wigley, "We were definitely in better shape than they were."

Five of UAH's six players scored in double figures. Kim McBride led the team with 18 points and was selected as UAH's most valuable player for the game. She was followed by Heather Day and Shana Cunigan, each with 15 points, Jamie Bradin with 13 points, Tanya Wigley with 12 points and Cassandra Garlitz with eight. Contrary to the belief of a small percentage of UAH students, the Exponent Sports Editor, Jennifer Grace, is not a member of the UAH basketball team, but thanks anyway for congratulating me on our win.

The Lady Chargers were not quite as successful against the Railspotters of Lincoln Memorial University last Saturday. L.M.U. posted a 26-2 record last year under head coach Roger Vannoy. They returned eight letter winners this year and lost only three. UAH was within two points of the Railspotters in the first four minutes but from that point on L.M.U. began building a lead that grew bigger and bigger in the second half. The final score was L.M.U. 103, UAH 70. Reported Coach Hagan after the game, "Playing an away game against a fine team who shoots 65% in the first half, plays ball court man-to-man defense and only gets three or four fouls called is just more than we're capable of with our numbers."

The Lady Chargers will have a week off and then travel to Armstrong State College on January 27. Their next home game is February 7 against the University of North Alabama at 7:00 p.m.

Charger men lose early lead to A&M exhibitionists

by Jennifer Grace

sports editor

The University of Alabama A&M men's basketball coach Van Pettaway announced several days before the 2nd Annual Mayor's Cup on January 16 that if UAH brought in more fans than A&M, the Bulldogs would lose the second half in my BVD's. "No such act was necessary as the Bulldogs packed a substantially bigger crowd than the Chargers, but that did not stop UAH from jumping on an early lead over A&M once the game began.

UAH was ahead 8-0 after the first minute when A&M finally scored their first basket. The Chargers continued on before breaking the Bulldog's press like an eggshell under the control of UAH guard, Mike Morris. Thomas Jones connected on a three-pointer at the 10:15 mark to give UAH their biggest lead of the game 26-16. As halftime neared, UAH was still up by eight until A&M Ronnie Tucker sank a three point goal in the last two seconds.

The Bulldogs wasted no time beginning their second-half comeback as 6'7" center Fred Clemont broke towards the hoop for a slam dunk that left the many A&M fans screaming wildly. A minute later, Clemont blocked a UAH player and slammed down another two points at the other end to give A&M a 44-41 lead with 17:30 left in the game. UAH trailed by six when they received a technical foul called at 15:25. That was the closest UAH would get to A&M for the rest of the game as the Bulldogs began to build a lead in the second half. By the time the scoreboard read Morris and Jones of A&M, it was 38-36. A&M made some mistakes by trying to put a lot of pressure on myself and we all made some mistakes by trying to make up for Thomas not being there," Steger scored 18 points in the game and seven rebounds. Several UAH players scored in double figures including Mike Morris with 14, Todd Howard with 12 points, and Chris Bateman, who had ten.

The Chargers will travel to Valdosta State on January 22 and then come home to take on Miles College on January 29, in Spragins Hall, at 7:00 p.m.

Carlos Peterson to head Charger soccer program

by Jennifer Grace

Charger soccer program

The University of Alabama in Huntsville athletic department announced today the promotion of Carlos Petersen from assistant soccer coach to head soccer coach of the Lady Chargers. Petersen was hired in August of 1989 as assistant soccer coach and intramural director. "Carlos is a very capable young man who is likely to enjoy much success in Charger Athletics," said Paul Brand, Director of Athletics. "I am pleased with the job he has done as an assistant coach and I am impressed with his desire to take on the head coach responsibilities and to further the Lady Charger soccer program to a prominent place in NCAA Division II. I am confident he is the right man for this important job."

Petersen replaces Dr. Stromecky, who retired earlier in the year but will stay on for one more season as an assistant coach and to head the program. Stromecky had Hockey team splits series, Prestegard out for fight

The hockey team played two games over the weekend against the University of Wisconsin - Stevens Point. Friday's game was exciting, but full of penalties and disqualifications. Shane Prestegard was involved in a fight at 6:46 in the third period. Prestegard got the better of the Wisconsin player, but paid for it by getting kicked out of Friday's game and disqualified for Saturday's game and the two games next week against Kent State.

UAH struck first with two goals scored within 20 seconds of each other. The first goal was scored by Jim Goonan and assisted by Prestegard and Richard Sloan. Don Rugg shot second assisted by Steve Kast. Wisconsin, ranked number one in Division III hockey, then scored the next five goals of the first period.

Wisconsin scored two more goals, one in the second period and one in the third, with two Charger goals sandwiched between. The goals were scored by Sloan with Kelly Krawchuk and Goonan assisting. The game ended with Wisconsin on top, 2-1.

Saturday's game was a different story. In front of over 3,000 people, the teams played one of the best games of the year.

Wisconsin scored first, two minutes into the second period, but 13 minutes later Richard Sloan scored, assisted by Kelly Krawchuk and Mike Mooney. With four minutes left in the period, Wisconsin scored again and the period ended with Wisconsin on top, 2-1.

Then Chargers Todd Awenger and Randy Resek scored the only goal of the second period. In the first 10 minutes of the third period, Richard Sloan scored, assisted by Don Rugg and Douglas McDonald. This tied the game and set it up for the grand finale in the third period.

With 4:22 left in the third period, Kelly Krawchuk broke open in front of Wisconsin's net, received a pass from Mooney, and scored what proved to be the winning goal.

The Chargers played outstanding defense with Randy Resek making 19 saves and the defensemen blocking five shots. The Chargers (7-15-1) take on Kent State this weekend at the Von Braun Civic Center.

been the head coach of Charger hockey for 11 years.

Petersen is looking forward to next season and feels confident the returning lettermen will provide the strong leadership on the team. Currently, the returning team members are involved in a specialized weight training program tailored to the individual soccer player. We are also practicing and playing indoors to improve our touch and skill level.”

Petersen is a UAH alumnus and alumni soccer player (1979-83). Recently, he was awarded the national level of certification from the National Soccer Coaches Association of America. A 1985 graduate, he received his degree in psychology and a minor in marketing.
