AMC announced last week that it will begin production of a spinoff series after the conclusion of their hit show, "Breaking Bad." The show will be a one-hour prequel series chronicling shady lawyer, Saul Goodman.

In Part Two of this review, we look at three more beers from the Stone Brewing Company: the Imperial Russian Stout, the Sublimely Self-Righteous Ale and the Old World Arrogant Bastard Ale.

This week’s spotlight focuses on Cora: an award-winning communication arts major with a passion for marketing, advertising and creating business plans.
“Have you ever seen the movie ‘What Women Want’? My dream job is to do what Helen Hunt’s character does in that movie. I want to be the Creative Director of an advertising agency,” confessed Cora Cloud. Judging from her accomplishments, she is well on her way to landing that dream job.

Cloud is a senior majoring in Communication Arts and minoring in Marketing. She grew up in Santa Cruz, Cali., and moved to Huntsville with her mother when she was 17. She lasted only six months in Alabama before heading back to California with a strong case of culture shock. After graduating high school back in California, she traveled to Central America and throughout Europe before settling down and returning to Huntsville to be near family and begin her college career. Cloud has a passion for marketing, advertising and creating business plans. This passion was evident during the Spring 2013 semester when she was part of Dr. David Berkwitz’s Marketing 466 New Ventures Challenge class. Dr. Berkwitz gave the class an assignment to come up with a business idea and produce a business plan. Cloud’s group, LaCredible, also consisted of classmates Lucy Lastre, Alex Gradkowski and Michelle Dunn. Cloud proposed a matchmaking business for well-educated men looking for well-educated women.

Cloud and her classmates conducted a focus group of local, well-educated, single men to determine what price these men would pay for help if asked and to engage them in conversation, often in English, such was the case with a pen-and-paper player at the Cum & Cucina bar restaurant, Eastern European bars in many respects been America’s most steadfast alum since the collapse of the Soviet Union. A pro-American attitude, not crime ridden streets. is what I discovered in Romania. Much of the cuisine of Romania was German influenced with a touch of Mediterranean. Pork, potatoes, tomatoes, and chicken prepared in German and Mediterranean traditions.

Along with the extensive bureaucracy involved with arranging international travel, the hardest obstacle to overcome was missing the small creature comforts of home. In time, it became easy to replace those with the comforts of Romania. Much of the culture of Romania was German influenced with a touch of Mediterranean. Pork, potatoes, tomatoes, and chicken prepared in German and Mediterranean traditions. An important takeaway from exploring Romania is just how small the Dracula legend is when looking at the entire country’s culture as a whole. I had to travel deep into the country’s culture as a whole. I had hoped we could have more hours’ of culture and restaurants. However, it was the time on the streets of Bucharest, Bran, and Brasov that I will carry with me for a long time to come. Following the dinner event, she decided that those few precious hours’ of culture and restaurants were spent hiking and hanging out with her Deidamia, Loa.

Traveling Abroad: Romania

by Nicholas Nedy

When she’s not busy studying to become the next Donald Draper or helping to put together award-winning business plans, Cora Cloud finds time to enjoy some of the many things Huntsville has to offer. She makes use of what little free time she has by participating in local events and spending time hanging with her dog, Lily. Not only does Cloud have a job to do, but that she has a job to do, but that, she has to travel the world to do it. In the end, Traveling Abroad: Romania, she has to travel the world to do it. In the end, Traveling Abroad: Romania, Bucharest was a highlight of her time in Romania. She obtained an internship with the Romanian-American University’s study abroad program in the Communication Arts Department, hoping to get some insight into what lies ahead for the next generation of marketers.

“I’m graduating in May 2014 and I plan to go to graduate school to get my Master’s in Applied Communications,” Cloud said. She has applied to several universities including the University of Michigan and Northwestern. When asked what she does for fun, Cloud said that she is a “firm believer in work hard, play hard.” She enjoys spending time exploring in events around town such as being the hostess for Dine & Dash event by Homegrown Huntsville, a local event-planning company. Dine & Dash takes people on a trolley ride throughout downtown stopping at five different locations to discover what the local bars and restaurants have to offer. Additionally, Cloud was the first contestant on “The Dating Game,” another monthly social event by Homegrown Huntsville. Besides being active in the Homegrown community, Cloud has minimal free time, but that she has to travel the world to do it. The Tide Rolls On

It has been called the game of the year, the game of the century, the rematch, whatever. The name, the most talked about game of the year took place this weekend as No. 1 Alabama traveled to College Station to take on No. 9 Texas A&M.

The game had all the hallmarks of a Richt bowl in the hype surrounding it. It was a game of Nick Saban's order and discipline vs. Johnny Manziel's chaos and creativity. It was a matchup between a veteran program vs. an SEC newcomer. It was a veteran discipline vs. Johnny Manziel's unpredictability. The game had all of the makings of a classic.

After two overtime periods, the game had all of the makings of a classic. The Alabama defense held tight, recording seven stops. The offense did not put up as many of the Alabama defense's numbers like her teammate Jasmine Hambright, or knock down three-pointers like Jordan Smith, but she led the team through her strong defensive play and her rock-solid knowledge of the playbook. The Tide was simply stronger. The team from Tuscaloosa outscored the Aggies 52-42.

"We usually do not have injured players travel with us on road games," Coach Roy Hentz said. "But Shannon had shown so much leadership from the bench that I had her come with us to all of our away games that year."

"I've been a team leader ever since. This offseason, though, I've expanded her leadership mentally off the court. Our secondary education major herself, Steinert has a friend who just got a teaching job at Westview Middle School. "A Tide school fairly close to the UAH campus," she said. "I think that Westview was lacking leadership and I thought it would be a great job for me."

"I've been a team leader ever since. This offseason, though, I've expanded her leadership mentally off the court. Our secondary education major Steinert has wanted to teach high school and coach basketball. She wants to make a difference in kids' lives, she said. Steinert has wanted to be a coach for most of her life, but was not until her 12th season in the league that she decided to become an elementary teacher. As for her coaching path, this year should give her a wealth of experience. Coming off last season where she helped her team to a conference tournament title and their first NCAA Tournament win in program history, what more can you ask for?"

"We need to get to the next level. Our goal is to repeat as conference champions and shoot for the national championship. We really want to host regionals too. After seeing the guys get to do that I really want us to host one before I graduate," the team goals are to win the national championship and have the highest team GPA. Shannon is a leader in both areas. She has been one of the players to step up and help out her teammates when they were down. She gives her teammates a nudge to get back up and fight. And she's also the one they turn to when they have questions about the playbook, knowing that she has already been through this.

The initiative is still in the beginning stages. The baseball team is planning to visit the school and there is a trip for the students in the works to come and tour the campus with the women's basketball team. The team will also be helping out with the middle school's basketball team. The students will even get a chance to experience Midnight Madness. Steinert has really stepped up to help out with the middle school's basketball team. The students will even get a chance to experience Midnight Madness.

The Tide was simply stronger. The team from Tuscaloosa outscored the Aggies 52-42.

It took him less than three minutes to score, then less than five more to score again. Johnny manhandled a few around the Alabama secondary in what seemed to be a mirror image of last year, 14-0. It was going to be a long game for Alabama. Just as Alabama fans were about to change the channel, the Tide leader in A.J. McCarron came out. Alabama could not stop A&M's quarterback, but McCarron's quarterback was not too bad himself. After a 22-yard passing touchdown, a 44-yard passing touchdown, and a 5-yard passing touchdown McCarron had given his team the lead. Alabama headed into the locker room at the half trailing 36-14. After the half, McCarron threw a 73-yard interception for a touchdown and Alabama had scored 36 unanswered points. Even though Bama was up 36-14 the game was still in the cards, McCarron did what only McCarron can do as he simply创造了 the end of nothing. He could not be stopped, throwing for 440 yards and rushing for nearly 100 more. The Aggies pulled within 45 with less than a minute to go and the Tide was simply stronger. The team from Tuscaloosa outscored the Aggies 54-42.
"Stagecoach" is the first Western I ever saw and is the first one anyone should see. It's one of the best pieces of the old Westerns; it warned me to some of my grandfather's tastes when watching the genre at night. "Stagecoach" represents the maturing of the Western, balancing character study and previous action. In it, a motley crew sets out from a dusty New Mexico town and heads through Apache country. Some, like the moody banker in the beginning, are respectable citizens while others, namely the gambler, are typical outlaws. The group keeps an eye out for the escaped outlaw Ringo Kid, playing off each other's family's moisture. Allegiances and sympathy are formed as they pick up the Ringo Kid in anticipation of an Apache attack. The stage eventually reaches Lordsburg in time for a face-off between Ringo and his family's murderers. The film does not only feature the action and tension of the classic Western, but also shows how a person's worth is defined by his actions, rather than his social position. Thomas Mitchell won an Oscar for his role as the hilariously alcoholic doctor; no further explanation is needed!

The Bank Dick

(1940)

The premise of W.C. Fields' (1940) The Bank Dick was to be left alone, but picks up the bank robbery witnesses a bank robbery somehow he manages to save an old, lazy town drunkard much of an explanation: After achieving anarchy and chaos in the overly-structured setting of commerce and banking. Somehow he manages to save the day in the end. Fields' drayk, dusty brawl receives support from multiple great supporting characters: his frightfully wis, old mother-in-law, bratty older daughter and her nifty fiancé, for example. We have all had days where we would wish the world would just let us alone and not be so happy, which makes this slapstick comedy, irresistible as it may be, incredibly realistic. Written by Fields and directed by Mahamane Kane, "The Bank Dick" ranks among the funniest movies of all time compiled by the American Film Institute.

Movie Review: Riddick

By Samuel Gibby

In 2000, the film "Pitch Black" was released and introduced the general public to the character of Richard B. Riddick. This film gained such cult following that it garnered a sequel. "The Chronicles of Riddick." Much like the first film, it gained a cult following. In comparison to "Pitch Black," the sequel was poorly made. On Oct. 5, 2013 Vin Diesel returned as the Ferrym, survived the final battle with the bad guys and returned to the coastline of dangerous characters that threaten them. This sequel returns to the supernatural tone of the first film and delivers plenty of action. The action sequences were passeable, and Vin Diesel's performances as Riddick was similar to his previous portrayal. The best part of the movie was the interaction between Riddick and the leader of the second mercenary team since it lead to "Pitch Black." The creature designs for this movie were especially unique and interesting. Even though the effects have distinctly improved since the last two Riddick films, these kinds of creatures would look better with practical effects instead of CGI. Deeper an art or so...

AMC's hit series "Breaking Bad" may be wrapping up its final season, but don't worry, the series will live on with AMC and Sony. AMC has confirmed that fan favorite shifty lawyer Saul Goodman, played by Bob Odenkirk, will return for one final round on a dangerous, left on a dangerous, survivalist in the latest part of the film, it gained a cult following. This film gained such a cult that was not consistent with the previous film. Overall, despite some good moments that surely will attract a few people to this movie, it really is not worth your time. "Breaking Bad" concludes as a potential spinoff for several events after "Breaking Bad" creator, Vince Gilligan, said in interviews that Saul was the only character he could afford to survive the series. He also hinted about wanting to do something as "Better Call Saul." AMC and Sony's deal will allow the show to skip the pilot stage and go straight to series development for "Better Call Saul" remain as one of the show's success stories. The "evolution of Saul" play the events of "Breaking Bad" before Saul served as money launderer, legal advisor and go-to guy for White and his accomplice Jesse Pinkman. Saul seems to think that the show will function as a prequel to "Breaking Bad." Saul Goodman, played by comedian Bob Odenkirk of "Mr. Show with Bob and David," was introduced half way through season two. Saul became a fan favorite. Saul supplied the comic relief that contrasted the dark nature of the series. "I like to think of Saul as a cockroach in the best possible way. This is a guy who's going to survive through it all. That's the end of it. Saul has been nuked into annihilation. He'll be the world's deadliest cockroach in the world," Gilligan said about Saul's personality and penchant for wearing motley colored business attire. However, beneath Saul's sleazy, showman veneer lies a sincere and a commitment to his clients that has pulled...

Stone Brewing Company Part 2

By David Vail

Last week I began my review of Stone Brewing Company, a new and swiftly growing brewery out of San Diego. I covered some of their best pale ales, and this week, I'm going to tackle some of their darker ones...

Random Stout

This lamy old style of beer was actually originally brewed by the British in the eighteenth century as a gift for the Russian Czar under the rule of Catherine II. It's pure an incredibly dark chocolate color and has an ABV (alcohol by volume) of 10.5 percent. The aroma is very real with notes of coffee and chocolate. The flavor is even more rich. It starts of mildly sweet with the same bold notes from the aroma, and it finishes with a lingering bitterness. Believe me, it's desirable.

Self-Righteous Ale

This one is an American strong black ale. It purity only a slightly lighter but still very dark brown color and has an ABV of 6.7 percent. The aroma is completely different from the Russian Imperial. It's very hoppy, like an IPA but with a unique mix of malts and darker fruits. The taste is step happy but noticeably dark and earthy. It's a very nice blend of a stout influence and an IPA. It's a very nice beer.

Era Amber Ale

This is a medium reddish brown color and has an ABV of 7.2 percent. The aroma is potent in sweetness, and you can definitely smell the whiskey barreled it has been aged in. The flavor yields deep and salty sweetness, creaminess, and a little bit of woodiness from the barrel itself. This is not a bad thing at all by the way. It's a bold and wonderful mix of flavors. This may be my favorite Stone so far.

ATO's Charitable Giving

UAHuntsville's Alpha Tau Omega contributed 40 percent of all the philanthropy money raised by UAH Greek organizations last year. They keep going out for philanthropic accomplishments.

After ATO's member, Paul Salmon, passed away from leukemia in 2007, the Theta Radar have been sponsoring research. In July 2013, ATO gave $20,000 to the Buffalo" was a brotherhood based on eternal friendship and work. ATO brothers firmly believe that helping others, even in small ways, can better their lives. If we had to go through what these kids went through, many of them would have no chance at all. I think it is important that we do what we can to ensure that there are always places where they can go. And Andy Hall, the fraternity's community service chair, explained to The Chargertime the importance of philanthropy for ATO. "As our creed says, 'to bind men together in a brotherhood based on eternal and immortal common goals' we are dedicated to accomplishing great goals because of our common purpose, "

UAH Cross country

by Taylor Reed

The Chargers cross country team started Saturday morning and as head Coach Daniel Goad stated, "we had about as good of a first meet this season as we could have possibly had."

Both UAHuntville men's and women's teams ran away with this trophy, winning the West Florida Invitational for the first time. Although UAH held a strong offensive presence as they continue to finish with six saves earning his first career shutout. Carpenter also played strong throughout the match as he maintained a defensive presence while keeping the other team from scoring. After a thrilling overtime, Isleifur Gudmundsson put away the game with just under nine minutes later, after being sucked into a ride and visually seeing the ashly smoke. One could look passing fair goers in clouds of smoke rising in huge clouds. The "Fireball", broke down during the day to attend Oktoberfest. Tends to be the most popular ride, the "carnies" manning the game booth one would have to have a historic year. The team has been hard at work all the off season and as coach stated "the hard work came together and presented the results we hoped for." On the lookout, "we have a championship-caliber team" and you can "expect big things at the end of the season!"
