1980 Annual Commencement
The Ceremonial Academic Mace

The ceremonial academic mace emerged in European universities during the fourteenth century as an amalgamation of two much older staff-like devices of similar length and shape. These were the regal scepter and the medieval battle mace. Assyrian and Babylonian kings carried scepters as insignia of the lawful authority of just rulers. The scepter was one of the principal symbols used in the coronation of kings and emperors throughout the medieval and Renaissance periods of history. Medieval princes first used the mace as an effective weapon in battle. By the time of the Norman Conquest of England the mace had become a staff-of-command wielded by kings and bishops. The concept of the mace being used as a protective symbol of lawful authority originated with this early practical application.

In the fourteenth century the royal scepter and the battle mace were combined to produce the ceremonial mace. It was carried before royalty, mayors of cities, and chief officers of medieval universities called rectors. The rector was the ancestor of the modern university president. Like the rector, who was the single head of the universitas magistrorum et scholarium, the university president represents the dignitas of the institution composed of faculty and students. The dignity of the university implies the special mission with which higher education has been vested by society. This mission to acquire, preserve, and transmit knowledge in the service of society requires that academic freedom be protected. Thus, the academic mace symbolizes the academic sovereignty and immunity of the university and connotes the protection of the president who has been vested with the institution's academic authority and autonomy. In commencement exercises the academic mace is an insignia of the vested authority of the university president to confer degrees. The presidential medallion worn over academic regalia in the presence of the mace indicates that the president is the temporary personification of the dignity of the institution.

At The University of Alabama in Huntsville, the mace represents traditions established centuries ago and further reflects what no other university has. Artifacts either made or altered in the American exploration of space may well cast this mace as the most unique academic item in the world.

A significant point of Huntsville history is represented in the chittimwood from Monte Sano that gives the mace its form. Local myth holds that the wood is identical to the shittimwood used in the Hebraic ark, but the mace wood is actually from a different family. The local legend also states that the wood is found only in two places, Huntsville and Jerusalem, and has been commonly held as true for more than a hundred years.

Near the top of the three-foot long, two-inch diameter mace is a glass display area backed with blue velvet reflecting the color for both the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and The University of Alabama in Huntsville. Inside the display area are materials processed during Skylab missions 2, 3, and 4 that represent the new scientifically and commercially significant field of materials technology in space. The George C. Marshall Space Flight Center constructed the display area and mounted the space artifacts provided by NASA.

The Redstone Arsenal provided a section of nose cone that has been added to the mace. The nose cone has undergone an ablative process developed by the Army Ballistic Missile Agency at Redstone to protect spacecraft re-entering the Earth's atmosphere at high speeds. The ablative process was proven successful with a flight in 1957 and one in 1959 that carried Primates Able and Baker into space, demonstrating that life could re-enter the atmosphere behind such a heat shield.

A ceramic quadrant displays the 1950 founding date of the institution as well as the year it became an autonomous partner in 1969. The quadrant also includes the University of Alabama System seal and the UAH logo.

A section of cedar log recovered from the 1823 Huntsville City Water System, the oldest public water system west of the Appalachians, follows the ceramic quadrant.
While the mace may be considered only as the integration of wood, metal and ceramic, it represents much more. One of the most gratifying characteristics is the coalition of local resources and craftsmen who donated their materials, creativity and spirit in constructing this unique academic symbol.

Heraldry of Academic Regalia

Scholars began wearing caps and gowns during medieval times. Since the halls of learning were unheated this custom may have been started more for warmth than for any other purpose. For whatever reason it was initiated, however, scholars have worn this traditional apparel ever since.

In the United States a uniform code for academic costume was established in 1894 by a special commission of representatives from colleges and universities, thus standardizing academic regalia for American scholars.

Scholarly rank and academic disciplines are denoted through the symbolism of color and through the cut of the costume. A bachelor's gown is black and untrimmed and has long, pointed sleeves. The color of the tassel on the mortarboard designates the academic discipline. For persons holding degrees in the Humanities, Arts, or Letters, the tassels are white; for Commerce, Accounting, and Business, the tassels are drab; for Economics, copper; Education, light blue; Engineering, orange; Music, pink; Nursing, apricot; and Science, golden yellow. The bachelor's hood, if worn, is three feet long.

The gown for a person holding a master's degree is black and untrimmed and has sleeves in the shape of an arc. The hood is three and one-half feet long.

A scholar who holds a doctorate wears a black gown faced with velvet and with three velvet panels on bell-shaped sleeves. The hood is four feet long. The color used in the border of the hood indicates the field of study. Doctors of Philosophy, for example, have hoods edged in dark blue. Other field colors which may be seen today in the processional are brown for Fine Arts, citron for Social Work, crimson for Journalism, green for Medicine, lemon yellow for Library Science, purple for Law, and scarlet for Theology. An aiguillette worn over a doctor's gown identifies a marshal.

Colors of the institution which granted the degree are carried on the silk lining of the hood, which usually has one or more chevrons. Blue and white are the colors of The University of Alabama in Huntsville.
