Poison Continues To Dispense Of Their Rock'n Poison With New Release

by Ken Shelton entertainment editor

For years now, Poison has been one of rock's pre-eminent bands, both in the studio and on the road. After a brief hiatus from the limelight, they're back at it again, dispensing their brand of rock 'n' roll poison stronger than ever.

With the release of their new Capitol Records CD, critics are raving over the new material, possibly their best to date. Poison's release, titled Native Tongue, also marks the debut of the band's new guitarist, Richie Kotzen. Kotzen, a long-standing Poison member maintaining their hard-edged sound are signed singer Bret Michaels, Bobby Dall on bass, and Rikki Rockett manning the drums.

Now into their fifth album, Poison, unlike many other groups, continues to be true to the sound which first burst them into rock and roll immortality with such famed cuts as Talk Dirty To Me and Nothing But A Good Time. Those, along with Every Rose Has Its Thorn and Unforgettable Love are best known for having a certain conviction in the lyrics. Southern band concentrates too much on polished cool and slick musical chord progressions, while leaving something to be desired in their lyrics. Native Tongue features the same basic elements for which Poison is famous, but has a freshness, newness, which evolves around a bit more soulful-edged sound than past releases for the band.

The first single cut off the album is climbing the charts fast. Most insiders in music, myself included, believe several songs from Native Tongue will take their rightful stand alongside other past Porongui and platinum hits. With songs such as Stand, Already receiving heavy radio spins, along with Stay Alive, Until You Suffer Sane (Fire And Ice), this prediction can hardly be wrong. Other worthy numbers include Bastard Son/10000 Heroes and The Stream. Each of the songs has real substance with a deep feeling of conviction, while still maintaining a catchy rock sound which Poison fans are accustomed to.

Newly acquired guitarist, Richie Kotzen said, "Joining Poison has enabled me to continue to grow creatively as an artist. I had no need to copy something that existed before. I do what I do naturally, as a player and songwriter. There are no restrictions." Kotzen recalls, "I played a riff that would grow to become Native Tongue's, Until You Suffer Sane (Fire And Ice) by one of the auditions when the band asked him about his own songwriting," Kotzen officially became a member of Poison in January of 1992. After spending months writing new material and then recording Native Tongue, Bret Michaels explained, "We must have auditioned Richie at least 20 different times and had written four or five songs with him before we felt he was one of us. It felt strange at first, writing with someone new, because we have always written all our songs as a band and never used outside writers. It was important to Richi, Bobby and myself to make sure Richie was the right one for the band, especially because the sound and tone of his guitar playing would dictate a lot of what the record itself would sound like. Richie fits perfectly with where we wanted to go with our music and the band. It just felt right, and with Pois­son, what has always worked is to go with our guts and in­stincts-pure and simple."

Poison is currently strutting their stuff on a U.S. tour to support this creative Poisonous rock and roll. Poison: Native Tongue rates a G.P.A. of 3.6.

by Marleni Delaney Damopon
Staff Reporter

A capacity crowd of enthusiastic students, parents and friends witnessed Miss Greek 1993 Kim Ingram, Kappa Delta (sorority), a sophomore in Secondary Education, crown Ginger Reed. The contest was sponsored by Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity, and was held Saturday, May 1 in the UC Exhibit Hall.

“Contrasting from three sororities (Chi Omega, Kappa Delta, and Delta Zeta) competed for the title. They were judged on their casual wear, evening gowns and responses to prepared questions.”

Reed is a member of Chi Omega. She is a junior in English. For the Casual Wear portion of the contest, Reed wore a white pants suit. Her evening gown was floor length, purple/blue with a silver bodice and a side slit.

“During the Question portion of the contest, she was asked which she would choose if she had to choose between being intelligent or beautiful, and could only be one. Reed responded, “I believe that beauty comes from within.”

Hammer modeled a black two-piece casual wear outfit and a black, shimmery, slit, fitted, long evening gown with gold sequins on the bodice and shoulders. When asked what was the biggest problem facing teenagers today, she answered, “I believe that the biggest problem facing today’s teenagers is peer pressure. Teenagers are dying of AIDS and car accidents because of peer pressure. If we can help lower its influence, we can save lives.”

Sims modeled an off-white pants suit for casual wear and a white, ankle-length, beaded, fringed, cut-out fitted evening gown. When asked what was the biggest problem of homelessness, Hamm responded that she would advise Clinton to establish job training centers to teach the homeless a vocation.

Manhart wore grey knee-length culottes with a white blouse for casual wear and a white, ankle-length, beaded, fringed, cut-out fitted evening gown. When asked what was the biggest problem of homelessness, Hamm responded that she would advise Clinton to establish job training centers to teach the homeless a vocation.

“Winners receive various prizes donated by area restaurants and merchants. They also receive roses, a plaque, and a crown.”

Long before the paws faced main street the regions of the southern United States, an ancient people lived here. These people believed in many things, among these was the belief in celebrating all that was good. For these people, there were many good things, the sun, the river, the land, and the harvest, just to name a few.

Also, these ancient people were optimistic. Being optimistic, they believed in celebrating what might be good. It was in this spirit that they anticipated a good harvest by celebrating the beginning of the planting season. Today, these ancient people are known as Indians. When the Indians celebrated, everyone was invited to join them. It is in the spirit of the Indians that we invite everyone to join us for our Second Annual Indian Party, May 14, and celebrate that is good.
